ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I owe a deep debt of gratitude and profound thankfulness to my Guide, Dr. K. Ramachandran, Professor and Head, Department of Economics, Pondicherry University, Mahe, for his able guidance, useful suggestions and constructive criticisms. But for his invaluable help and sustained interest and unabated encouragement, this work would have been a mere impossibility.

I am very much grateful to the member of the Doctoral Committee Dr. C. Arputharaj, Professor and Head, Agro Economic Research Centre, Madras University, Madras and Dr. M. Ramadass, Professor and Head, Department of Economics, Pondicherry University, Pondicherry, for the detailed discussions and useful suggestions on my thesis.

I am thankful Dr. T.C. Mohan Vice Chancellor, Annamalai University for his encouragement in taking up this research work.

I deeply indebted to T.R. Kallapiran, Chief Officer, Management Services Department, Indian Overseas Bank, for his continued motivation, encouragement, and discussion of my thesis. It is he who enthused me that,
I, as the officer in charge of Economic Research Department of Indian Overseas Bank, should take up Ph.D., work. My thanks are due to him.

My sincere thanks are due to the Management of Indian Overseas Bank for having permitted to pursue my Ph.D., study and to use the published data available at the Bank. I also thank Prof. U. Ayyasami, and Prof. Nallagoundan, Department of Economics, University of Madras, Dr. A. Rajamani Department of Economics, National College, Trichy for their suggestions in the selection of topics, methodology and encouragement.

I also thank my colleagues Mr. D. Venugopal and Mr. V. Sankaranarayanan Economists, Economic Research Department of and Mr. S. Baskaran, Officer of Indian Overseas Bank for their help and inspiration in carrying out this research work.

I owe immensely to the respondents and the bankers for their co-operation during the field work.

On a personal note, I pay my humble respect to my father Mr. C. Varadarajan who has instilled in me for the pursuance of knowledge and to my school teacher Mr. A. Pasupathy for his sincere blessings for the research work. I also deeply acknowledge and warmly appreciate the encouragement, given from the beginning by my wife. Mrs. R. Shanhttha Devi, and also my children bearing the pain of sacrificing the affecionate care of their father.

I also wish to thank the institute, Madras for the neat execution in typing this thesis.

I greatfully remember also many indispensable individuals, who have worked behind the screen and have seen me though this research.

Date: ___________________________ (V. RENGAJAN.)