ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A doctoral dissertation is definitely an interminable academic’s voyage: In fact so does it appear to those understanding when it terminates at least one is remind of obligations and assistance accepted in course of the journey. I have no words to express my gratitude to Dr. J.K. Sharma, my supervisor, teacher and Guru, Reader in Department of History, Panjab University Chandigarh at whose advice I took up this topic and whose constant and ungrudging guidance has enabled me to complete this thesis. Dr. Kiran Pawar, Chairperson, Department of History and her office staff offered me all the facilities, I needed to pursue my research. I am conscious of their good will and grateful to them.

A thesis is based chiefly on books and journals generally available in a good library. To the librarian and staff of Panjab University Library I am deeply indebted for offering me every facility to complete my work. I have had the advantage of the writing of many learned historians who have made laborious and minute researchs to this subject, while I acknowledge to them my indebtedness for the information they furnished. This thesis has taken more than three years to finish with and my parents patiently stood by me all these long years. I have no words to thank my parents and friends: G.S. Negi, R.S. Chauhan, Aditya Angiras, K. Thakur, C.S. Thakur, P. Rongta, H.K Chauhan, G.R. Chauhan and many more for their profound interest in my work and unbroken support in my hours of difficulty and depression. My thanks are due to Miss Shakila M.A. (Sanskrit) who rendered me most valuable assistance in translating many Sanskrit passages into English and Hindi. And finally I have great pleasure in expressing my indebtedness to Prof. Jeet Singh Chauhan (Head of the Department of English, R.K.M.V. Shimla) and Mr. J.A. Khan (Research Scholar) for reading through the typescript of thesis and their valuable advice and suggestions.
