important is to stimulate quality of work life consciousness among the employees and the management of industry, i.e., workers, unions and management.

The present study attempts to evaluate the quality of work life in the high labour intensive textile industry of Rayalaseema. This study, in the main, concentrates on the analysis of quality of work life aspects in the private, the cooperative and the public sector organisations.

The first half of this study deals with the aspects of quality of work life and the socio-economic profile of the employees in the selected Textile Units. The later half the study presents a comparative analysis of quality of work life based on the survey results of the selected units. A brief summary and conclusions of the study are presented at the end. In the present context of socio-economic and political life survival itself has become difficult for some sections of the workers in Textile industry. It is hoped that the findings and suggestions of the study will help to enhance the levels of efficiency and production of textile industry.
