ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis has accumulated a great many debts to numerous people at different points in time. It is not possible to acknowledge everyone by name, but I must express my deep sense of gratitude to the following who have seen through the completion of the thesis without holding them responsible in any manner for the outcome of the thesis.

For having introduced me to the theme, for having enthusiastically and painstakingly gone through the study and having given it the shape it has, I am indebted to my research supervisor, Professor Padmini Swaminathan.

Jeyaranjan and Ajit deserve a special mention for having generously devoted a considerable amount of their time and for the immense patience they have shown in going through the drafts of the thesis. I am really indebted to them. My profuse thanks to Manabi Majumdar for having gone through the draft thesis in record time. I also thank M S S Pandian for his support and guidance.

My fellow research colleagues at the Institute, Akila, Sentamizh Selvi, Rukmani, George and Anbazhagan have all been a constant source of help and encouragement to me during the conduct of the thesis. I am grateful to all of them.

Professors C.T. Kurien, A. Vaidyanathan, S. Neelakantan, Nirmal Sengupta and Paul Appasamy, have facilitated the smooth conduct of the research by providing timely administrative and academic help. I thank each of them.

Anandhi, Meena Gopal, Satyasree, Ramani Mathew, P. Dayalan and Vidyasagar have each helped in very many ways in collecting information and establishing contact with institutes and organisations outside Chennai. I am extremely grateful to them.

I thank the staff and librarians of the Madras Institute of Development Studies, Chennai; Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi; Indian Toxicology Research Centre, Lucknow; Central Leather Research Institute, Chennai; Tata Institute of Social Science and Central Labour Institute, Mumbai, for their generous help and cooperation in locating relevant literature for the thesis.

I would be failing in my duty if I do not thank the people of Dindigul, particularly my respondents without whose co-operation this thesis would not have been possible. Special thanks are due to KMA Tanners, Thirumalai Kumar of CETP, K. Palani Sami, TALCO, Alphonsoa and Kumar who helped me immensely with my field survey. My stay at Dindigul would not have been possible but for the co-operation extended by the Dindigul Tanners Association.

The thesis has been funded by the Indian Council of Social Research, New Delhi, to whom I am greatly indebted.

I also thank the management of Stella Maris College and my colleagues of the Department of Economics for their co-operation and help.

Last but not the least I wish to acknowledge with gratitude Mohan, Sundaram, Veni, Robinson and Maheswari, all from MIDS, for their service and help all through my stay at MIDS.

The production of the thesis owes a great deal to Hema. I thank her for her patience and for the efficient execution of the task.

Finally I owe my parents, brothers and sisters a great deal for having put up with me all through the period while the thesis was in preparation. I have no words to thank them.
